D.LIGHT DESIGN PARTNERS WITH CLINTON GLOBAL INITIATIVE
Partnership Established to Rebuild Haiti by Providing Life-Changing Light

New Delhi, India, 26 September 2008 – D.light Design today announced that the Clinton Global Initiative has selected it as a partner in its MyCommitment.org project. Through MyCommitment.org, CGI has issued a Call to Action to assist in recovery efforts of the island-nation of Haiti, devastated by recent hurricanes and tropical storms. D.light is one of several dozen organizations selected to provide specific resources or services in rebuilding communities in Haiti.

MyCommitment.org builds connections between proven projects and donors who can provide the necessary funding. D.light Design is positioned to provide off-grid lighting for up to 40,000 Haitian families once donor support of USD $1 million is received. Only $25 covers the cost to manufacture and ship one of our high-quality solar-chargeable LED lighting products. The Nova is D.light's premiere product, providing light that is 10-20 times brighter than a kerosene lantern and lasting up to 32 hours on a single charge. The Nova is specifically designed for households with access to no or very limited electricity, and is built to withstand harsh climates and environments.

For households that have been devastated by natural disaster, having bright and reliable light is a key step towards recovery. Light can increase safety at night, allowing families to guard against wild animals or robbers. Having light also extends the day for families, increasing the number of hours in which they can work or study.

"We are pleased to partner with the Clinton Global Initiative in meeting the needs of families in Haiti," said D.light Design CEO Sam Goldman. "We believe that our lights will provide the security and potential for these households to rebuild their lives and their communities. We hope that donors will step forward to partner with us in this worthy cause."
